Dear (Customer Name)

Imagine some of these scenarios if you will.

You're having some friends and family over. Suddenly, your beloved pooch drags his bottom along the floor. Everyone stares from your pup to you and back again. Some sniggering ensues...

You're having a BBQ in the backyard with some friends from work. Your pup comes out to do his business, then proceeds to eat it! Everyone stares from your pup to you and back again. Everyone just lost their appetite...

You go upstairs to clean the litterbox and instead of your cat, you see your pooch backing out of the litterbox, chewing on something brown and caked with litter that only a dog could love. You stare from your pup to the litterbox and back again. Your stomach turns...

You wake up in the middle of the night to get a glass of water when your bare foot comes down on a wet, squishy present your fluffy feline left for you. You stare blindly in the dark as you carefully peel it off your foot...

When out on a walk with your cute little pup, "that" neighbor strikes up a conversation, then asks what that "nasty stuff" is stuck below your furry friend's eyes. You stare from your adoring pup to your neighbor, wishing he lived one block over...

Poop-eating (whether a pup eats his own or some from his feline housemate's litterbox), bottom scooting, unsightly tear staining, and hairballs are all everyday challenges in any pet household that can stretch your patience and dignity. It can also strain the bond you share with your furry friend.

But why continue to cope with them?
